Intxausti Rekondo, Joseba (Euskaltzaindia. Hernani, 15. 48004 Donostia): Luis Astigarraga Ugarte, politikari eta pedagogo euskaltzalea (Segura, 1767 – Gasteiz, 1840) (Luis Astigarraga Ugarte, Basque language loyalist politician and educationalist (Segura, 1767 – Gasteiz, 1840)) (Orig. eu)

In: Ikastaria. 16, 11-45

Abstract: The report presents the personal biography and the political and ideological journey of Luis Astigarraga Ugarte (1767-1840), showing his path creating projects (Otsaurte) and explaining his teaching programmes (Pestalozzi, Lancaster), as well as demonstrating the efforts he made to take Euskera to schools. Also, it pays attention to the unusual history of the Diccionario Manual Bascongado (1825-1933). Astigarraga started with the “enlightened” tradition of the Caballentos de Azkoitia (...1797) in order to find his political and ideological function on the trails of Liberalism (1808-1833).

Marquès Sureda, Salomo (Univ. de Girona. Dept. de Pedagogía. Emili Grahit, 77. 17071 Girona): Los testimonios de los maestros en Historia de la Educación (The testimonies of teachers in the History of Education) (Orig. es)

In: Ikastaria. 16, 47-61

Abstract: This deals with the experience that has taken place at the University of Girona. Oral testimonies gained through interviews with exiled and purged Republican teachers as well as with those of the early decades of the Franco period make it possible to complete the knowledge about the school reality provided by the written documents, and to conduct an in-depth study of specific subjects like Catalan history, language and culture.

Analytic Summary

In: Ikastaria. 16, 65-69

Abstract: This paper deals with the development over twelve years of the experience of the research group attached to the “Kuadrillategi” association. This is the result of a professional team that makes use of natural groups in order to guarantee a knowledge of Basque and its use, and is spread throughout the Southern Basque Country [administered by Spain]. A group of 285 young people in all were involved during the 2006 academic year. It could be said that what we are seeing is a new method of Basquisation. In the last part some critical comments are made with respect to Fishman’s approaches.

In: Ikastaria. 16, 83-108

Abstract: This work compares Eusko Ikaskuntza Congresses I and XII. Books that were published as a result of the influence of the first congress have been examined and compared with current ones in order to highlight differences between them. Books used today in schools, in spite of being in Euskera, were not originally written in that language. Nevertheless, all early text books were created here.

In: Ikastaria. 16, 109-142

Abstract: In this work we analyse how the subject of the Basque Country has been approached in XX and XXI century text books. The Basque Country is a territory, a community, a people. We analyse the content of the curriculum from a perspective of the socio-cultural reality. For this purpose, we have analysed the iconography and the textual contents of the text books, focussing on the setting of the message.

In: Ikastaria. 16, 143-168

Abstract: After reviewing the feedback received from various spokespersons from the educational field, the Department of Education, Universities and Research has published a draft of the Basic Education curriculum. The educational community should now intervene by putting forth their proposals to determine what Basque students learn between the ages of 6 and 16.

Key Words: Basque curriculum. Basic Education. Educational Scope.

In: Ikastaria. 16, 171-190

Abstract: This work intends to explain how linguistic rights are shaped within the educational system from a legal point of view. In order to achieve this, the research was started from two points: on the one hand, it explains the linguistic weight of the (basic) laws of education and on the other it explains the legal influences which focus on the status of Euskera on the teaching system. With this as a starting point, it analyses the linguistic law in the Basque Autonomous Community, Navarre and the French Basque Country, and it ends with various conclusions and proposals.

In: Ikastaria. 16, 193-225

Abstract: This article describes the work carried out by the Councils of Guipuzcoa, the Provincial Council and the inhabitants of the rural neighbourhoods (baserritarrak) to develop childhood education and the schools in those neighbourhoods during the XVIII, XIX and XX centuries. The special situation of the neighbourhoods and quarters of Guipuzcoa (scattered baserris, difficult financial situation, lack of motivation towards school both in children and parents, religious influences, jagged terrain...) conditioned children’s education in these areas. The action of the church in this respect also needs to be highlighted.

Key Words: Literacy. Education. Neighbourhood schools. Primary education. Historic research.

In: Ikastaria. 16, 227-240

Abstract: After taking as the starting point the statalization of teaching, which has been the cornerstone, this paper will go on to highlight the mission of school in bringing State and Nation together, in which the effort to embody community identity based on culture as well as language is of crucial importance. Finally, the perspective(s) expressed by Basque Nationalism when faced by the State’s political action is/are specified, while the importance of the control over the education system, the Basque culture and the Basque language with respect to the building of the nation is highlighted.

In: Ikastaria. 16, 241-267

Abstract: The aim of this work has been to confer an image of the teaching profession in the province of Gipuzkoa when General Franco was in power from 1936 to 1975. An overview is also given of the origins of Normal Schools and the problems that were encountered by students and teachers, as well as how this phenomenon affected the teaching profession.

In: Ikastaria. 16, 317-347

Abstract: Dealing with the development that took place in Secondary Education in Gipuzkoa during the 19th century involves mentioning a number of major towns and cities; among them Bergara deserves a special mention, because it was where the Centre of Learning that reflected the official nature of that Secondary Education was set up and developed. Donostia [San Sebastian], too, as far as education was concerned, was a city that showed increasing interest, so that it was able to assume and offer a category of teaching that was in line with the socio-cultural development the city itself was offering.

In: Ikastaria. 16, 351-367

Abstract: This deals with the training of Ikastola [Basque-medium school] teachers in Navarre following the Spanish Civil War (1936). A large proportion of the teachers started working in the Ikastolas without being in possession of the necessary qualifications, although it was possible to solve their pedagogical training through a parallel training system. The problem was confined to the administrative sphere.

Abstract: For this research, we asked ourselves what happened after the war to the discourses and practices developed before the war by the Emakume Abertzale Batza association and, in general, by nationalist women. Here we will explain the work carried out by these women in the field of children’s education and, more specifically, for the diffusion of the language and the culture, especially in exile; we will be focussing on a concrete experience: the ikastola Euzkadi-Venezuela in Caracas.

Key Words: Basque exile. Gender. Education. Basque schools.
Abstract: Oral testimonies are tools commonly used in historic research but, what happens when we transform the gathering of those testimonies and the editing of history itself into a learning? The Ikastola Bihotz Gaztea of Santurce has taken up this idea and has prepared and developed a project of oral history, turning its pupils into researchers, from infant school to compulsory secondary education. In this work we will explain the key to understanding how this process has been carried out, demonstrating that learning history in another way can be an extraordinary adventure, both in formal and informal education.

Key Words: Personal testimonies. School projects in oral history. History teaching methods.
